THE SUMMER GIRL

THE SUMMER GIRL.
As Robert Grant Sees Her She Is Not Entirely Attractive.
July Scribner.

It is safe to allege that the average summer girl in this country has been doing all she ought to do in the way of dancing, prancing, gadding, going, working, and generally spending her vital powers to the autumn, winter and spring immediately preceding, and consequently when summer comes round, quite as much as her partner.

ments, physical, mental and moral ozone. But what does she prefer to do? Which is she bent on leading her father by the nose with the assistance of her mother? To various places, according to her special predilection, and the furthest limit of the acreage she purifies if she can. She is the gayest watering places, where she hopes to bathe, play tennis, walk, talk and drive during the day; paddle, stroll or sit out during the evening, and dance until 12 o'clock at night. Two or three times a week. Else to some much-advertised mountain resort, to take refuge to lead a vagrant life.

and the leaf is about to fall and Dorothy returns to town, what has she to show for it? A little lass and a calling card, a promised winter correspondence with the best clerk near Shanghai some knock at banjo playing and considerable uncertainty in her mind as to whom she is engaged or whether she is engaged at all.

The Sense of the Blind.
New York Ledger.
"Throughout my whole life," said a blind man, "I have been blind."

the remarkable feature in it: I always have before my eyes a brilliant light, so that I feel as though I were walking in light. I have been told that I am like a picture of beautiful colors, which I see mingled with the light. I have been told that my blindness has always been for me, in a certain way, brightest.

As a girl of sixteen I came to me other abnormal peculiarities, which have been the cause of much trouble to me. I have always told when others are looking at me, that I feel as though I were walking in light.

looking at me in kindness or the reverse. My sense of hearing is extremely sensitive. I can hear it if I can read—so that tones of the voices of men and women around me are like pictures to me.

"I can also discern character accurately in the touch of a hand. I have certain instincts for which I have no excuse, which sometimes make me forecast future events. My senses of touch and smell are excessively delicate.

The Way We Paid the War Debt.

Prof. Benj. Andrews an Scribner.

No nation ever took a braver course than the United States in liberately beginning the reduction of that enormous debt which has been piled up by the way, and the payment went on leaps and bounds. The policy was to call in the bonds and to pay them off and replace them by others bearing lower rates.

Under the administration of Mr. Taft that has been done, and the income so that have set so late a date—for the time when the four-and-a-half per cent bonds were proved unnecessary.
